

Aspergers Syndrome and AD/HD What's different, what's the same, and what helps in the classroom.

Many young children have been diagnosed with AD/HD, only to have the diagnosis changed when they are older to Aspergers. Sometimes children have both conditions, but only one gets identified, and sometimes the diagnosis is never made for either.

This workshop looks at the diagnostic characteristics of both Aspergers Syndrome and Attention Deficit/Hyperactivity Disorder and gives some general guidelines and strategies that may help children with these conditions both in the classroom and at home.
