

Nothing is Delayed about Puberty!

It is important to provide Health and Sexuality Education to your child with a disability at a young age.

This training explores the “who, what, when, where, & how” about teaching our children and youth with disabilities sex education. The training is not about “SEX”, but rather how sexuality is developed over the span of our childhood and teenage years, and why this information is so important for kids with disabilities to learn. People with disabilities are at an increased risk of becoming victims of abuse. The training delves into what skills and concepts kids need at every age level on the topic of sexuality development as well as how we can teach these skills and concepts at home and how we might address them in the IEP.
